We apply CSI techniques to crack cases and obtain awards exceeding the norms

In the last 60 days, the Dinizulu Law Group, Ltd has obtained out-of-court settlements well in excess of seven figures. Our cases presented serious challenges: Protocols weren't followed and key witness accounts were inconsistent. But DLG tracked down and interviewed witnesses, found documentation that strengthened our argument, and interpreted medical evidence to reveal the truth.

We cannot reveal the amounts due to confidentiality clauses. But we can tell you that the awards in the highlighted cases exceeded the norm. And, in a right-to-work state such as Illinois, the amount we secured from our client's former employer is the case in several recent cases against this municipal employer to successful.

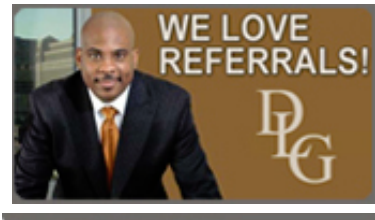

Read on to learn how DLG used CSI tactics to crack these cases. The first involves an Alzheimer's patient who was severely malnourished and dehydrated at a nursing facility. Next, we'll tell you how our investigative due diligence proved a supervisor wrongly fired a road worker but retained another who had been involved in a similar situation a year earlier. And, lastly, read how DLG's staff nurse/attorney connected the dots to prove two home healthcare workers improperly moved a patient, resulting in a hip fracture. Read More...

Employment Discrimination: A Case of Similarities vs. Differences

Employment discrimination is difficult to prove in court. Using our CSI investigative techniques, we were able to secure a significant settlement, the night before trial, for our client. Our client was fired from his job, which was to assist stranded motorists, after hitting an irate motorist who put his life in danger.

In June 25, 2010, Mr. Robinson was assisting a stalled motorist along the shoulder of a major thoroughfare. Police also were at the scene, which is standard practice. The owner of the stalled vehicle arrived in a separate vehicle, dangerously crossing three lanes of traffic to arrive on the shoulder. Mr. Robinson verbally admonished the motorist for unsafe driving. An argument ensued, but Mr. Robinson walked away. His back turned, the motorist grabbed him. Startled, and unnerved at the possibility of imminent danger of being struck by a passing vehicle, Mr. Robinson spun around and hit the motorist.
